Tween & Teen Programs

Staff Training / Skill Toy Kits / Support Materials

Provide tweens and teens in your library system, summer camp, or after school program with the opportunity to unplug and slow down long enough to discover important lessons about themselves, their learning process, and how to approach stress in a healthy way. Flow Circus' sustainable skill toy programs combine educator training with supplemental tools to create a novel way to engage your teens throughout the summer and school year.

Flow Circus has provided me with invaluable tools to provide exceptional programming.

The program made the participants "celebrities" around the Club. Because of the skills they learned, other members were drawn to them as they practiced and performed.

Enthusiasm for self-directed learning and leadership

Training: Half or full-day trainings focus on increasing comfort with the tools, understanding current research on the teen brain and social development, and implementation of tween/teen programs. Educators may not be masters at skill toys by the end of the session, but they learn how to create a culture of success that motivates teens to practice, fail, and try again.

Skill Toy Kits: A carefully curated selection of skill toys from around the world includes flower sticks, kendama, yo yo, and more. Some require precision while others lend themselves more to creative play. All can be used individually or in groups, on stage or for competition, and indoors or out. Most importantly, they are all hands-on and thumbs-free getting teens up and moving in a novel, social, clique-neutral way.

Support Materials: Instructional videos and programming materials are based on more than 10 years of running skill toy workshops at Boys & Girls Clubs, YMCAs, private camps, and public libraries. The materials support educators as they put training into practice and develop sustainable, dynamic programming for their communities.

The biggest benefit to incorporating skill toys is it offers a common platform for students of all backgrounds to work together to achieve a common goal.
